Reserve Generation

The Band of the U.S. Air Force Reserve's popular music group, Reserve Generation, represents the Air Force and Air Force Reserve in concerts at high schools, colleges, universities, and cities throughout the United States. They entertain thousands each year, performing an intriguing mix of contemporary popular and country hits, and selected favorites from the 50's to today. The professional, energetic, and versatile Reserve Generation presentations always reach an enthusiastic response from all age groups. They present a unique blend of personal styles to each show.

Reserve Generation has performed for special events and festivals all over the country as well as troops and civilians all over the world. One of the group's highlights included an appearance on TNN's "Nashville Now". They have also performed for troops in Honduras, Turkey, Italy and the Azores. They have also performed for dignitaries such as U.S. Ambassadors to Azerbaijan and Bulgaria.

This group features the vocal talents of Reserve Generation's Non-commissioned Officer-in-charge Technical Sergeant Tim Fountain, as well as Senior Airman Tammy Boone. Keeping the rhythm section together is Senior Airman Dustin Hertz on drums and Senior Airman Kurt Morrow on bass guitar, along with the electrifying guitar sounds of Staff Sergeant Rob Walker. Staff Sergeant Craig Stevens helps expand the group's repertoire with his energetic keyboard melody lines and fusion of different musical styles which give the group their own unique sound.

The members of the Band of the U.S. Air Force Reserve are professional Air Force musicians working in support of the Air Force Reserve and Air Force Recruiting and community relations objectives.
